COOKING AS A FINE ART.

Monsieur Blot's Academy-Interior Arrang ments and Proceess of the Cuisine. From the New York Tribure.] It is a large room, well lighted, and furnished with many benches, a table or two, a safe for

The soup, we discover, already exists in the embryo, for a French artist never allows his soup kettle to leave the range, where it gently and contentedly simmers, every ready to receive the awkward knuckles which must not disfigure the pretty side dish, the marrowy bone whose unsightliness banished its succulence from the platter, the trimmings of the shapely joint, the skimmings of the turbulent pot whence savory chickens or a tender leg of veal send forth appetizing prophecies.

Soup being incipient then, we are requested to naider the fillet, which must be treated first, as requiring longest baking. Upon the fillet we concentrate our gaze, and we learn that it weighs five pounds; that it is carefully cut and trimmed; and, altogether, a credit to its bovine originator. Baking, Monsieur explaios, is at best an ill substitute for roasting. The juices are dried, the meat is toughened. Nevertheless, he flatters bimself, when the joint is dressed, and cooked BELL'S SPECIFIC PILLS as he advises, the injuries which the oven in-

The acidalous contents being scooped from the ruddy bowls into a shining saucepan, bread crumbs, which, in this skillful menege, put on a hundred dainty and toothsome disguises-the delicatest spices, and a suspicion of onions rush together to form the stuffing, which your new-born confidence in Mon- INSURE NEW LIFE in the debiliated and sieus Blot assures you will be excellent. And now it is time to turn the fillet still bubbling on

Soup, beef, tomatoes being all under way, let us examine the cauliflower. Potatoes, explains day cook them. American house-wives cherish the potato, but at times it is extravagant, and it never indispensely. is never indispensable. These tomatoes, with their stuffing, shall be found very good. The eauliflower, refined by our process of cooking, shall not remind you of its coarse family, the If you require a reliable remedy to restore you, are cabbage, and in reality, in this dinner, so admirable, there is no place for the potato.

Well, then, cauliflower is boiled with a drop of milk in the water to give it whiteness, and, being boiled, a delicious dressing is poured around it—the basis of every sauce and every gravy being lapsus, &c. Then a pale island in a sea of sauce, whose uneven summits are white with the inevitable bread-crumbs, it is lost in the yawning oven. Meanwhile the fillt is the third time turned, and if we had not seen it quietly inured in the oven, we could aver that it was turning on a spit, so positively, through its savory fumes. it declares itself a roast; and the tomato juice, being done now, is whisked from the range, returned, apotheosized to its native sells, bread COMMISSION MERCHANTS. crumbs again, over again, and we wait while hope becomes fruition.

Not idly, though, for in some imperceptible the numble cook has found space to make the paste for his cream cakes. A little flour, a little butter, a little water being gathered to their final saucepan, the master subdues them with a add themselves, apparently of their own volition and the delicate compound is ready in the twinkling of an eye.

When the paste cools the patient bass has his turn. Another knite, slender as the blades of Damascus, meanders down his right side, and makes sharp vertical incisions in the left, that the dressing may penetrate and flavor the fish. Then its sauce-broth, of course-with magical spicery, and the plump bass follows the fillet and becomes a memory.

And now the chicken. Two small fowls are dissected in a breath. The fine, plump pieces WHOLESALE! for the waiting sauce pan, the s raggy bits for the expectant soup kettle. Santi, explains Sir Oracle, is not fry. Frying can be made palate in most American kitchens, disengages the fatty acids, toughens the meats, and produces a disgusting and indigestible result. Look, now, the chicken is placed in this pan already heated, an atom of butter is added, that the bits may not burn the dish, and the well meaning fowl developes his tenderest possibilities. Beefsteak cooked in this way will be found excellent.

While the chicken simmers the cream-cakes are baking, the tomato sauce is prepared. Then the lid of the soup kettle is litted, and out comes a venerable fowl, whose presence we had not suspected. This chicken, explains the tutor, was old and tough, and therefore cheaper. But by long and skillful boiling, being at first only allowed to simmer, that the juices might be given out, it will be found entirely tender. The soup is already flavored; we will take a bit of the white meat, which, chopped very fine, shall give richness to the broth, and to morrow the contingent remainder of the chicken shall reappear in a delicious salmi, called of the valgar hash. And now, continues Monsieur, we have but to take up this little dinner, so easily prepared, and taste if

SYMPTOMS. CALL FOR A CIRCULAR DESCRIBING ALL

SYMPTOMS: The symptoms of Catarrh, as they generally appear are at first very slight. Persons find they have a cold that they have frequent attacks, and are more sensitive to the changes of temperature. In this condition, the nose may be dry, or a slight discharge, thin and acrid, afterwards becoming thick and adhesive. As the disease becomes chronic, the discharges are increased in quantity and changed in quality; they are now thick and heavy, and are hawked or coughed off. The secretions are offensive, causing a bad breath; the voice is thick and nasal; the eyes are weak; the sense of the smell is lessened or destroyed; deafness frequently takes place. Another common and important symptom of Catarrh is, that the person is obliged to clear his throat in the morning of a thick or slimy mucus, which has fallen down from the head during the night. When this takes place the person may be sure that his disease is on its way to the ungs, and should lose no time in arresting it.

The above are but few of the many Catarrh symptoms. A Single Bottle will last a Month-to be used three times a day.
